

GRAND HOTEL CONTINENTAL SIENA – STARHOTELS COLLEZIONE

The only 5-star luxury hotel in the heart of Siena

History

A magnificent 16th century building waits to be explored in Siena's historic center: it's the Grand Hotel Continental Siena – Starhotels Collezione, formerly Palazzo Gori Pannilini. A Renaissance architectural gem, the hotel is a landmark of prestige right in the medieval heart of the city, overlooking Piazza Salimbeni, just a few steps from Piazza del Campo. Its magnificence has earned it a notable spot in the artistic and cultural patronage of Siena: history and art are at home in this beautiful building. Its meticulously restored frescoes, fine furnishings, marble sculptures and elegant atmosphere have won over an elite clientele through the centuries – from 19th century young aristocrats to Queen Margherita of Savoy; from German politician Hoerst Koehler to world-class entertainers, such as Dee Dee Bridgewater, Dario Fo, Mario Botta, Andrea Bocelli and Daniel Craig.

Built in 1501, the building originally belonged to the Montanini family and then passed to the Aringhieri. In 1522, it was considerably expanded at the behest of Paul Salvetti, but was not renovated until 1677 by architect Carlo Fontana, according to Pope Alexander VII Chigi's wishes on the occasion of his niece Olimpia's wedding to nobleman Giulio de' Gori. From that period onward, the building was known as Palazzo Gori Pannilini.

At the beginning of the 20th century, it was transformed into one of the most important hotels of Siena. Under the ownership of Cavalier Zazzera, the Hotel Continentale quickly became the most elegant and popular hotel in the city; even Queen Margherita of Savoy frequently chose it for her stays in the area. The Queen's final visit was in 1925, just before her death. To this date, visitors can see a plaque in the palazzo commemorating her first stay at the hotel.

Starting with the 1920s, the Continentale became known as Continental, vaunting all the modern amenities. Unfortunately, it saw a rapid decline upon the completion of the new Excelsior complex and with a decrease in wealthy visitors to the city.

In 1936, Zazzera believed that shutting down the hotel was the best option, but thanks to assistance from the Monte dei Paschi Bank and the Azienda Autonoma di Soggiorno e Turismo tourism department, it managed to survive until World War II.

After the war it changed owners multiple times and it faced a relentless and constant decline, which continued until the early 2000s.

The Grand Hotel Continental reopened its doors on February, 14th 2002, as the first and only 5-star luxury hotel in Siena, under the property of Royal Demeure. Starhotels acquired it in 2016.

THE GRAND HOTEL CONTINENTAL TODAY
A winning combination of tradition and contemporaneity

Favored for its very central position, closeness to the “Passeggiata della Lizza” and the “Stradone di San Domenico”, the hotel stands in the heart of the historic center, but within easy reach of the countryside surrounding the city. The main views over the city streets and the sides facing some of Siena’s most important monuments, like the Duomo and the church of San Domenico, combine to create a priceless scenery.

A short walk on the polished stone of medieval streets separates the hotel from the main architectural and artistic landmarks of the city, as well as a vibrant array of specialty shops, restaurants and bars.

The palazzo's main facade stands on the opposite side of Palazzo Spannocchi, along the street once known as Via Cavour, today called Banchi di Sopra, just 200 meters from Piazza del Campo and 400 from the Cathedral. The ground floor is marked by a massive portal surmounted by the Gori family crest, an eight-point star.

The same symmetry is also found on the first floor, where an equal number of openings flanks both sides of the balcony hanging over the main door. The symmetry is broken on the second floor, however, where the entire level is windowed.

Inside, the hotel lives up to its original splendor: it boasts 51 rooms and suites, equipped with 18th century furniture and precious textiles, with no detail overlooked.

The palazzo's historic ambience fuses perfectly with today's comforts for flawless atmosphere and service.

Sapordivino: the Grand Hotel Continental restaurant

With its extreme simplicity, Sienese cuisine sums up all of Tuscany's best flavors and ingredients. Its style – simple but carefully crafted – is deeply influenced by the region's history and geography. This is why the fundamentals of Sienese cuisine rely on local agricultural products, including meats from native breeds and exceptional olive oil. This strong connection with local farmers is one of the defining characteristics of this cuisine. And, of course, no Sienese dish is complete without a glass of wine: local wineries are among Italy's best and it's always exciting to explore their varied styles.

It is in the Sapordivino restaurant of the Grand Hotel Continental that the culinary art of Siena, expressed through the hands of Chef Luca Ciaffarà, finds expression. His cuisine is genuine, characterized by strong flavors, made with natural ingredients from the best producers of the area, and cooked slowly at low temperature to enhance quality and preserve flavor, aroma and texture.

Wine Cellar By Sapordivino

Grand Hotel Continental is also home to the Wine Cellar by Sapordivino, located under the eponymous restaurant. The cellar has its own special, unique charm, and is located within one of the most interesting areas of the palazzo: the base of the hotel's medieval tower, excavated in the ancient Pietra di Torre, a Sienese cavernous limestone. Its thick stone walls, dating back to the 13th century, combined with modern elements such as glass and steel on the design of the famous wine connoisseur Luca Maroni, house a vast collection of fine Italian labels and a selection of excellent Tuscan wines, all served by experienced sommeliers and bartenders.
